COLUMBIAN
ALMANAC,

FOR THE YEAR

1828:

Being Bissextile, or Leap Year.

CALCULATED BY WILLIAM COLLOM.

PHILADELPHIA:

PRINTED FOR JOSEPH M'DOWELL,

No. 25, Market Street.

NOTES TO THE READER.

1. The calculations of this Almanac are made to solar apparent time.

2. The time of High water at Philadelphia, is given for morning and afternoon. The time of High tide on March 12th 1828, is found, by looking against the 12th under the words Morning and After'n—the time of High tide for the morning is 11 h. 21 m.—and for the afternoon 11 h. 49 m.—the next time of High water, which is 12 h. 27 m. afterwards, will not take place till 16 m. past noon on the 13th, therefore a blank is left for the morning.

3. The rising, setting, or southing of a star, may be carried several days backward by adding, or forward, by subtracting 4 minutes per day. For instance, on the 27th of the First month, (January,) Sirius is south at 10 h., adding 8 min. for 2 days sooner, we have 10 hours and 8 minutes for the southing on the 25th, and deducting 12 minutes for three days later, leaves 9 h. 46 m. for that of the 30th of the same month, &c.

4. Twice the time of the Sun's setting gives the length of the day, and twice the rising that of the night.

5. Take notice, that as the days begin at midnight, whatever is referred in the Almanac, as occurring during the Sun's absence, after that time, must be looked for in what some think the night before.

May pride never increase our enemies, nor put our friends to flight.

Joseph White, an ancient religious person of Roseras county, in Tipperary, Ireland, informed Robert Dudley about the year 1754, that he frequently attended the Assizes for the said county, held in Clonmell; at one of which an old man, a banker in that town, gave him the following relation, which happened about fifty years before:

In the latter part of the year 1641, a number of children were playing on the banks of the river Suir, near Golden, in said country, when a man came riding up to them, (all of whom he knew to be born of Protestant parents,) and with a pike threw several of them into the river, which was so deep, that they were drowned immediately. One of the children, a girl of about eleven years of age, ran off through the fields by the river side, and got to Clonmell, thirteen miles from the place where they had been attacked by the man. There was a vessel then lying at Waterford, from America, taking in servants and passengers; an agent of the captain's finding this child unprovided for, took her, with many others in equal indigence, and they embarked for America, as indented servants for seven years. The captain sold her time to a planter, a single young man, I think of Maryland. The rectitude of her behaviour during the seven years, her amiable disposition, and comeliness of her person, so attracted her master's affections, that when she was free he proposed to marry her, which she at length acceded to, and they lived together in great conjugal felicity for several years, until they had six children; about which time she declined in health and spirits, and a deep melancholy overspread her mind, to the great distress of her husband, who observed her particularly when she thought him asleep at night, to sigh deeply, as if something very weighty affected her. At length he pressed her closely to tell him what affected her; as he was sure the great change he observed in her person, spirits and manners, must proceed from a cause he was a stranger to: and as his happiness was so intimately connected with hers, he desired her to disclose the cause of this change. After much solicitation, she informed him what she saw when a girl, in Ireland—and that scarce a day or night had passed, for the last twelve months, but she felt a pressure on her mind, as if she heard it distinctly said, "Thou must go to Ireland, and bring the murderer of the children to justice." This, at times, she believed to be a divine intimation, yet on reasoning about it, she thought the effecting thereof, by her impossible, and consequently, the apprehension of its being a divine requiring, must only be a delusion. Thus was she tossed, she said, in her mind, about this matter: at one time believing it to be her duty, and at others only imagination; which so affected her, that she thought it must soon end in her dissolution. Her husband affectionately sympathised with her in these exercising conflicts; and after solid consideration of the matter, warmly encouraged her to fulfil what he had no doubt, was a divine requiring; and that he would contribute all in his power to accomplish this reasonable duty; and added, that as their Governor's brother was the lord-lieutenant of Ireland, he thought it a suitable time then, and he would go to him and get letters of recommendation to Ireland that might enable her to bring this man to justice, whose name she acknowledged she did not know, but told her husband his person was so stamped upon her memory, that she was sure she should know him among thousands of others.

Her husband prepared every thing necessary for the voyage—procured the Governor's and other letters, and so encouraged her by his sympathizing tenderness, that she recovered her former health and spirits in a few weeks, and embarked in a vessel bound for Dublin, accompanied by two discreet person, a man and maid servant, sent by her husband, with every requisite accommodation; and arrived safely at their intended port.—Soon after which she went to the castle of Dublin, to wait upon and deliver the letters she brought to the lord-lieutenant, wherein she was warmly recommended by his brother, as a discreet and reputable woman, who with her husband, bore an excellent character in their own country—did much good with the influence they were blessed with, and hinted the occasion of her going over to Ireland—requesting he would assist her all he could.

She was received with great respect by the lord-lieutenant and his lady, who were much affected with the distinct relation she gave them of the occasion of her undertaking so long and perilous a voyage, from a sense of duty; and both seemed to enter deeply into the matter, as worthy of public concernment, yet thought great secrecy and prudence requisite to effect the desired purpose. The lord-lieutenant, who is represented as a wise man, sent for the Judges, who were just then appointed for the Munster circuit, and showed them the letters she brought from his brother in America, and some others, and requested they would interest themselves in this engagement of hers. And after an interview with her, and hearing from herself a full relation of the whole matter, they treated her with great respect, and assured her of their vigorous assistance to bring the murderer to justice. But as she did not know the man's name, nor where he now dwelt, (if living,) they saw much difficulty in the matter: but one of them suggested, that as his person was so strongly marked upon her memory, (as she said,) and that the approaching Assizes for the county of Tipperary, which is generally one of the strongest in the kingdom, he might probably attend, and be seen in the Court. And as the matter for which she came was known to no others in the kingdom, excepting those four and herself, it would be best that no other person should be made acquainted with it: and they would take care she should be placed in so convenient a part of the Court-house, every day of the approaching Assizes at Clonmell, that if he should be there, she might have an opportunity of seeing him.

Matters being thus settled, she and her servants, as if taking a tour of pleasure through the country, went from Dublin to Clonmell, arrived timely for the Assizes; and the first day of their sitting, she was placed, by the direction of the Judges to the Sheriffs, in a commodious place for that purpose, and for some time with anxious thoughtfulness, watched for the person she wished to see. At length a jury were returned by the Sheriff to try a cause, and upon their names being called over to be sworn, she saw a man come forward and take the book, whom she instantly knew to be the person she came to prosecute—and then heard his name called. At a suitable time (as had been before agreed on) she let the Judges know the man was in Court, and sworn on the pettit jury, and gave them his name. The Judges instantly adjourned the Court, and sent the high-sheriff for this juryman to meet them at their lodgings immediately, where they soon arrived; and on sitting down, one of the Judges said to this woman, "Madam, be so good as to relate the matter before this gentleman, that you told us and the lord-lieutenant, last week, in Dublin Castle." She then began, with looking full in the face of this juryman, and said, "My lord, when I was about eleven years of age, in the latter end of the year 1641, I saw that man now before your lordship, throw seven little children into the river Suir, near Golden, with a pike which he thrust into their bellies, and I escaped from him by running away; and so proceeded to relate the rest, as before set forth, of her getting to this town, Clonmell, and being engaged as a servant for America, &c. While she was speaking, he grew pale and trembled exceedingly. But when she came to that part of her relation, of feeling a pressure of mind for more than a year, (which she believed to be from divine requiring) to come to Ireland, and endeavour to bring him to justice for these murders, he seemed quite overcome, and confessed his guilt, and the truth of all she asserted; at which the grand jury were sent for by the judges, and on her information, bills of indictment were found against him; and next day he was tried, found guilty of these murders, and executed in Clonmell, pursuant to his sentence.

She speedily returned to her husband and children, and lived many years afterwards in great happiness with them, fully restored to her former health, and in peace and serenity of mind.

(Signed) ROBERT DUDLEY.

N. B. This man had read his recantation from the church of Rome, and became a Protestant, and so was qualified for being a juryman.

A PICTURE OF HUMAN LIFE.

Our life is but a winter's day;
Some only breakfast and away.
Others to dinner stay, and are full fed;
The oldest man but sups and goes to bed.
Large is his debt who lingers out the day;
Who goes the soonest has the least to pay.

ACCOUNT OF EDWARD DRINKER.

Edward Drinker was born in a cottage, in 1680, on the spot where the city of Philadelphia now stands, which was inhabited at the time of his birth by Indians, and a few Swedes and Hollanders. He often talked of picking blackberries, and catching wild rabbits, where this populous city is now seated. He remembered Wm. Penn arriving there his second time, and used to point out the spot where the cabin stood in which Wm. Penn and his friends were accommodated on their arrival.

The life of this aged citizen is marked with circumstances which perhaps never befell any other individual. He saw the same spot of earth, in the course of his own life, covered with wood and bushes, the receptacles of wild beasts, and birds of prey, afterwards become the seat of a great city, not only the first in wealth and in arts in America, but equalled by few in Europe. He saw great and regular streets where he had often pursued hares and wild rabbits; he saw fine houses rise upon morases, where he used to hear nothing but the croaking of frogs; great wharves and ware-houses where he had so often seen the Indian savages draw their fish from he river; and that river afterwards full of great ships from all parts of the world, which in his youth had nothing bigger than an Indian canoe; and on the spot where he had gathered berries, he saw their City-hall erected, and that hall filled with Legislators, astonishing the world with their wisdom and virtue. He also saw the first treaty ratified between the united powers of America, and the most powerful prince of Europe, with all the formality of parchment and seals, and on the same spot where he before saw William Penn ratify his first and last treaty with the Indians. And to conclude, he saw the beginning and end of the British Empire in America. He died on the 17th of November, 1782, aged 103 years.

ON A MISER.

They call thee rich, I deem thee poor,
Since if thou dar'st not use thy store,
But sav'st it only for thine heirs,
The treasure is not thine but theirs.

His form was fair; his cheek was health,
His word a bond; his purse was wealth,
With wheat his fields were covered o'er—
Plenty sat smiling at his door.

His wife the fount of ceaseless joy—
How laugh'd his daughter, play'd his boy:
His library, though large was read
Till half its contents deck'd his head.

At morn 'twas health, wealth, pure delight:
'Twas health, wealth, peace and bliss, at night.
I wish'd not to disturb his bliss—
'Tis gone: but all the fault was his.

The social glass I saw him seize,
The more with festive wit to please;
Daily increased his love of cheer.—
Ah, little thought he I was near.

Gradual indulgence on him stole—
Frequent became the midnight bowl:
I in that bowl the HEAD-ACHE plac'd,
Which, with the juice, his lips embrac'd.

SHAME next I mingled with the draught,
Indignantly he drank and laugh'd.
In the bowl's bottom BANKRUPTCY
I plac'd—he drank with tears and glee.

REMORSE, then did I in it pour,
He only sought the bowl the more.
I mingled next joint-tort'ring PAIN,
Little the less did he refrain.

The DROPSY in the cup I mix'd,
Still to his mouth the cup was fix'd.

My emissaries thus in vain,
I sent, the mad wretch to restrain:
On the bowl's bottom then MYSELF
I threw; the most abhorrrent elf

Of all that mortals hate or dread.
And thus in horrid whispers said:

Successless ministers I've sent,
Thy hast'ning ruin to prevent:

Their lessons naught—now here am I,
Think not my threat'nings to defy;
Swallow thou this, thy last 'twill be,
For with it thou must swallow ME.

Haggard his eyes—upright his hair;
Remorse his lip—his cheek despair,
With shaking hand the bowl he grasp'd,
My meatless bones his carcass clasp'd,
And bore it to the church-yard—where
Thousands ere I would call repair.

DEATH speaks—ah, reader, dost thou hear?
Hast thou no lurking cause to fear?
Has not o'er thee the sparkling bowl
Constant, commanding, sly control?

Betimes reflect—betimes beware—
The rudy, healthful, now, and fair,
Before slow reason seize the way,
Reform—postpon'd another day,
Too soon may mix with common clay.

An alarming warning to an intemperate young man, (a physician) who was given to ill company and hard drinking. Taken from Thomas Chalkley's Journal.

About this time our doctor (a beautiful young man,) dreamed a dream, which was to this effect, himself related it to me: he said, "He dreamed that he went on shore at a great and spacious town, the buildings whereof were high, and the streets broad: and as he went up the street he saw a large sign, on which was written in great golden letters, SHAME. At the door of the house, to which the sign belonged, stood a woman with a cann in her hand, who said unto him, Doctor, will you drink? he replied, with all my heart, for I have not drank any thing but water a great while, (our wine and cider being all spent, having had a long passage) and he drank a hearty draught, which he said made him merry; so he went up the street reeling to and fro, when a grim fellow coming behind him, clapped him on the shoulder, and told him that he arrested him in the name of the governor of the place. He asked him for what? and said, What have I done? He answered, for stealing the woman's cann; the cann he had indeed, and so he was had before the governor, which was a mighty black dog, the biggest and grimest that ever he saw in his life; and witness was brought in against him by an old companion of his, and he was found guilty, and his sentence was to go to prison, and there lay for ever."

He told me this dream so punctually, and with such an emphasis, that it affected me with serious sadness, and caused my heart to move within me; for to me the dream seemed true, and the interpretation sure. I then told him he was an ingenious man, and might clearly see the interpretation of that dream, which exactly answered to his state and condition; which I thus interpreted to him: "This great and spacious place, wherein the buildings were high and the streets broad, is thy great and high profession:—the sign, on which was wrote Shame, which thou sawest, and the woman at the door, with the cann in her hand, truly represents that great, crying, and shameful sin of drunkenness, which thou knowest to be thy great weakness, which the woman with the cann did truly represent to thee:—the grim fellow who arrested thee in the devil's territories, is Death, who will most assuredly arrest all mortals:—the governor whom thou sawest, representing a great black dog, is certainly the devil; who, after his servants have served him to the full, will torment them eternally in hell. So he got up, as it were in haste, and said, God forbid! it is nothing but a dream. But I told him it was a very significant one, and a warning to him from the Almighty, who sometimes speaks to men by dreams.

Now about this time, being some days after the doctor's dream, a grievous accident happened to us. We meeting with a Dutch vessel in Lima bay a little above the Start, hailed her, and she us. They said they came from Lisbon, and were bound for Holland. She was loaded with wine, brandy, fruit, and such like commodities; and we having but little water to drink, by reason of our passage being longer than we expected, therefore we sent our boat on board, in order to buy us a little wine to drink with our water. Our doctor, and a merchant that was a passenger, and one sailor went on board, where they staid so long until some of them were overcome with wine, although they were desired to beware thereof; so that when they came back, a rope being handed to them, (they being filled with wine unto excess,) were not capable of using it dexterously, insomuch that they overset the boat, and she turned bottom upwards, having the doctor under her. The merchant caught hold of a rope called the main sheet, whereby his life was saved. The sailor not getting so much drink as the other two, got nimbly on the bottom of the boat, and floated on the water till such time as our other boat was hoisted out, which was done with great speed, and we took him in; but the doctor was drowned before the boat came. The seaman that sat upon the boat saw him sink, but could not help him. This was the greatest exercise that we met with in all our voyage; and much the more so, as the doctor was of an evil life and conversation, and much given to excess in drinking. When he got on board the aforesaid ship, the master sent for a cann of wine, and said, Doctor will you drink? He replied, yes, with all my heart, for I have drank no wine a great while. Upon which he drank a hearty draught, that made him merry, (as he said in his dream;) and notwithstanding the admonition which was so clearly manifested to him but three days before, and the many promises he had made to Almighty God, some of which I was a witness of, when strong convictions were upon him; yet now he was unhappily overcome, and in drink when he was drowned. This is, I think, a lively representation of the tender mercy, and just judgment of the Almighty to poor mortals; and I thought it worthy to be recorded to posterity, as a warning to all great lovers of wine and strong liquors. This exercise was so great to me, that I could not for several days get over it: and one day while I was musing in my mind on those things relating to the doctor, it was opened to me, that God and his servants were clear, and his blood was on his own head; for he had been faithfully warned of his evil ways.

WHEN THE WINGS OF THE SOUL.

When the wings of the soul are expanded for flying,
And hope is the star that enlightens death's vale,
Oh! who would reprieve the glad spirit from dying
To tenant this mansion of weeping and wail!

If its stains, wash'd away by the full, crimson gushes,
From the wounded Redeemer, no longer deform,
Why weep for the spirit, to Heaven that rushes,
On pinions, more bright than the tints of the morn?

Completed for glory and fleet as the dove,
Ascending to bathe in the fountain of love.
Tho' death has encountered with merciless fingers,
And cruelly torn the fine chords of the soul,

Weep not, oh weep not, since no longer it lingers,
Exposed on the earth to death's haughty control;
But far, far away in the mansions of splendor,
Its long-hidden glory is broadly unfurled.

With harps and loud accents of praises to render,
It lisped in the desolate dust of the world;
Rejoicing with pæans, and pure as the dove,
All its stains washed away in the fountain of love.

ANECDOTES OF PETER THE GREAT.

This prince was at all times careful to visit the works and manufactures of the country through which he passed. Having gone to see the iron-works at Istria, he remained there for some time, in order to learn the manner of conducting the manufacture. When he left it he had with his own hands wrought eighteen puds of metal, each pud weighing forty pounds. His attendants were employed in carrying fuel, lighting the furnaces, and blowing the bellows. At his return to Moscow, the Czar went to visit Hermer Muller, the proprietor of the work; and after bestowing great praises upon his manufacture, he asked him how much he paid his workmen for a pud. Muller said he generally gave them three copecks* or an altin. 'Very well,' replied Peter, 'I have then earned eighteen altins.' Muller immediately pulled out eighteen ducats, and presenting them to him, saying, that a workman like his majesty ought not to receive less. 'No,' said Peter, stepping back, 'I will have none of your ducats: I have wrought no better than a common workman, and therefore you must pay me as such. With the money I have earned I intend to buy a pair of shoes, of which I am at present in great need.' He then showed him the shoes he had on, which were much torn, and had already been soaled—took the eighteen altins, actually bought a pair of new shoes; and every time he put them on, he enjoyed singular satisfaction in telling that he had procured them by the labour of his own hands.

Tirmond, one of his ablest surgeons, and to whom he was much attached, having died, his widow married a young barber from Dantzick, who was somewhat more expert in gallantry than surgery. As he became very wealthy by this marriage, he made a great figure at Moscow. Being one day sent for by the Czar, he went to court in a magnificent dress, and in one of his most elegant carriages. Peter examined him roughly; told him he was a blockhead; and immediately called in a troop of valets and peasants, whom he ordered him instantly to shave. The gentleman barber was under the necessity of obeying, to the great amusement of the whole court, and was then permitted to return with the same parade in which he had arrived.

In 1716, passing through Dantzick in his way to Holland, and finding that divine service had just begun, he desired that he might be conducted to church. The burgomaster immediately waited upon him, and conducted him to the most conspicuous seat, that of the chief magistrate. Peter having seated himself, obliged the burgomaster to sit down by him. He then listened to the sermon with great attention: but finding his head grow cold, he all of a sudden, and without saying a word, pulled off the magistrate's huge perriwig, and gravely put it on his own head. They both remained in that ludicrous situation till the end of the sermon, when the Czar, with a nod by way of acknowledgment, returned the perriwig.

At the famous affair at Pruth, in 1711, the Czar's anxiety being much greater for his empire than for himself, he dispatched the following letter to his privy council at Petersburgh: "I have now to inform you, that without any fault of mine, but from false intelligence, I find myself, together with my whole army, surrounded by the Turks, (who are four times our number,) and cut off from every sort of provision. Without the immediate interposition of heaven, I can expect nothing but a total defeat, or to be made prisoner by the Turks. If the last should happen, you must no longer consider me as your sovereign, nor execute any of my commands, although written by my hand. If I should be cut off, you must immediately proceed to choose from among yourselves him whom you think most worthy of being my successor."

THE LAWYER AND HIS DOG.

A short time since, a dog belonging to a certain limb of the law in an adjacent township, very unceremoniously entered a butcher's shop, and made free with an excellent leg of mutton, neither stopping to inquire the price, nor to ascertain the weight thereof. The dog, however, it appears, was well known, and the poor butcher immediately proceeded to the owner's house. The case (barring the person's name to whom the dog belonged) was stated to Mr. Latitat, and inquiry made if the mutton could not be recovered. "Oh! most certainly, I will write to the person immediately." The cunning 'flesher' having thus ascertained the law of the case, begged leave to inform the Attorney that his dog was the aggressor! "O! very well what is the price of the mutton!" "Three and four pence," exclaimed the overjoyed butcher. "There it is sir," replied the Attorney, throwing down the money, which was eagerly taken up by the other, who then proceeded very leisurely to leave the house, when the Attorney called him back and addressed him in the following language: "I have paid you for the mutton; my charge for advice is 6s. 8d. which I insist upon you paying immediately!" The butcher pulled a dreadful face, at the mortifying information; and, knowing there was no way of escape, drew forth the money, and paid the lawyer his fee, determined, in his own mind, never to attempt to outwit an Attorney again.

THE PASSIONATE MAN.

A footman of Fletcher of Salton, desired to be dismissed. "Why do you leave me?" said he:—"Because to say the truth, I cannot bear your temper."—"To be sure I am passionate, but my passion is no sooner on than it is off."—"Yes," replied the footman; "but then it is no sooner off than it is on."

An effectual method to remove the lime which congeals in tea kettles, from frequent boiling water in them.

Take one-fourth of a pound of Spanish Whiting, put it in the kettle when full of water, and boil it for one hour, or until the lime is removed.

WEAK EYES.

By mere chance I have found out that a piece of green glass, laid flat on a book, will be of the utmost benefit to those who are troubled with weak eyes. I mean to to those who wish to read, but who are often, perhaps in the most interesting parts, obliged reluctantly to leave off. Some will say you may as well wear green spectacles—but I say, No!—A piece of fine clear green glass, about the size of a royal octavo page, will be found of infinitely more assistance. As this simple method of preserving the sight, may be of importance to many of your readers, I will be glad if you would give it publicity. A CAMBRIAN.

CURE FOR WENS.

The following extraordinary fact has lately come to our knowledge:—A planter in the vicinity of Raleigh, N. C. had been for some years afflicted with a wen on his neck, which grew so large as to be very inconvenient and distressing. After trying a number of remedies, he was advised by one of his neighbours to wash it two or three times a day with strong salt water, (water in which salt had been dissolved.) He did so, and to his great relief and comfort, the wen gradually decreased in size, and finally disappeared! Let those who are similarly afflicted, "go and do likewise." [Raleigh Reg.

A CURE FOR COCKROACHES.

A respectable professional gentleman informed us yesterday, that he has recently discovered that the spirits of turpentine is an effectual remedy against the depredations of Cockroaches. He recommended to put a little of it upon the shelves or sides of your book cases, bureaus, armoirs or other furniture, in which they take shelter, which may readily be done with a feather, and these troublesome insects will soon quit, not only the furniture, but the room. The remedy is simple and easily obtained by every person who wishes it. It is not unpleasant to the smell—soon evaporates, and does no injury to furniture or clothing. This is a valuable discovery, if it proves, in all cases, as effectual as our informant assured us it did in his house. [Louisiana Ad.

GINGER BEER.

To 40 quarts of water, add 13 pounds of sugar, 12 good lemons, or a proportionate quantity of lime juice, 8 ounces of bruised ginger, and the whites of 6 eggs well beaten; mix all together, skimming it before it commences boiling, and boil it for 20 minutes. Add an ounce of isinglass and a spoonful of balm; after it is put into the cask stir it well. It will be ready for bottling in 10 days. [Raleigh Star.

Recipe for the destruction of Bed Bugs.

To prevent bugs or insects from harbouring in wood, wash it with a strong solution of vitriol. To render it more efficacious, some coloquintida apples should be boiled in the water in which the vitriol has been dissolved, and the bedsteads and wood about them, and the wainscoating well washed with it, and it will be ever after clear of worms and bugs.

CURE FOR SORE EYES.

Take a lump of White Vitriol of the size of a Walnut, and a lump of rock Salt of the same size—boil them in a pint of water, to half a pint, in a new earthen vessel; strain it through a clean linen cloth, and it will be fit for use. If it should be too severe, add a little water. May be applied two or three times a day.

HOUSE FLIES.

These troublesome little insects may be effectually destroyed without the use of poison. Take half a tea spoonful of black pepper in powder, one tea spoonful of brown sugar, and one table spoonful of cream, mix them well together, and place them in a room on a plate where the flies are troublesome, and they will soon disappear.

FEDERAL COURTS.

THE SUPREME COURT holds one session annually, at the seat of general government, on the first Monday in February.

CIRCUIT COURT. For Newhampshire, on the 19th of May and 2d of November, at Portsmouth and Exeter. Vermont, at Windsor and Rutland, alternately, the 1st of May and 3d of October.
